leave for the country or senside, in August, is feeling very jubilant, for they can now be secured, and good ones at that, for a mere trific. It is wonderful how the price of them has fallen, and the economical girl has not done so already, for she will aiways look well in a nest dark blue blazer suit of good cut and ht and a pretty Norfolk water or shirt front. A good serge is a joy forever. There's no spelling it, and with an ample supply of protty waists one doesn's get thred of wearing it. There are a great many ways to make the waists, and the three patterns given may suggest some

For a ployels suit also, sorges are very good. But they should be of a very heavy quality, or some breezy day the fair rider will be greatly distressed to find her skirt blowing up considerably as she rides in the look pretty off the wheel, you will find it worr comfortable and becoming when you are monated. Flanner is a very bed material to use: it catches and tears very easily if by any penaltility it is caught in the pedal, when a beary sorre won't be upt to. Conducty is a good material in a light weight: the heavy qualities don't hang over the knees gracefully. Gray or dust caller is an excellent shade, for even on maddy days it looks nest, while a darker shade gets all splashed and notify looking. For a braght, sunshiny day, however, dark himser black is the ideal color, for a woman is always inclined to look much shorter and broader on a wheel than she actually is, and of course a light shade will only heighten this ugit effect.

Nover wear any underskirts with your binycle suit; they're inconvenient and embarrassing. Turkish brousers reaching a little below the knees, with pretty ruffles, are much more antisfactory. In summer light unes are delightfully cool, and in winter heavy ones worn over close-fitting underwear are warm enough for the colless day one could ride.

Unfortunately, we can't have many pretty furbelows on our bicycle skirts. If was do acquer or later we'll come to grief when they catch and what as all up in the wheel, so that we have to be unwound or alse cut locue. It isn't at all pleasant either, to be threwn from your wheel when the aforesaid winding up begins, but very comfortable and becoming when you are mounted. Flanner is a very hed mate-
